FEARFUL STORM AT SEA.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Specials from St. Augustine, Fla., furnish the following additional particulars of the disaster to the steamship City of Vera Cruz: On Saturday afternoon the steamer encountered a strong gale which soon increased in fury; it was then about two bells, 5 p. m., and the steamer was running on her course, being in about 80 degrees west longitude and 30 degrees and 40 minutes north latitude. The sea was running high and the City of Vera Cruz labored heavily but sturdy for some hours. Every effort was made to keep her before the wind, but it was found necessary, at 1 o'clock on Sunday morning, to throw out a drag to keep her head about. This secured the desired effect for the time being, but the gale had now grown to a hurricane, and immense waves began to break over the doomed steamer. Each succeeding wave tore away pieces of her upper works until her deck was fearfully swept clear, even her rigging being torn and shattered. The drag ceased to fulfil its functions as seas rose over her bows and deluged her decks. They soon reached the furnaces and was the first man lost. The steamer B.
